

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. I used to be bothered regularly by telemarketers, especially while eating dinner with my family, or helping the kids with their homework. That is our time together, and I despise the interruption, especially given that at no time did I ever ask for them to call, nor did I request any services they offered, either written or oral. It was normal to receive at least one un-wanted solicitation from telemarketers a day, and two or three calls were not uncommon. Adoption of the laws here in Indiana has made a welcome and noticeable difference, please don't alter what works for us.
